

Study Categories for TIP Project Solicitation

General transportation planning studies include county or city-wide transportation plans, bicycle/pedestrian or trails master plans, corridor planning studies, sub-area transportation or circulation plans, etc. A competitive application from this category would include items recommended from previous, more broad studies, such as a county-wide planning effort. General transportation planning studies should ideally identify proposals for future scoping and concept development.

Project scoping/concept development studies are project specific and intended to identify and assess project deliverability risk, determine alignment and assess possible environmental, community and right-of-way impacts. This study category will cover all activities through concept approval outlined in GDOT's Plan Development Process, resulting in a final deliverable of a draft, GDOT-reviewed Concept Report.

Other - proposals could include plans or studies related to electric vehicle charging station locations, smart parking solutions, safety awareness or education programs, etc.
